4 Ways Locus Can Increase Your Margins

Unique Items

Because unique “one-off” items do not have a base line price, they are a great way to increase margins either as a small part of a larger job or as a single item for your customers.

Trade-Offs During the Bid Process

During the review and bid submittal process, there are opportunities to suggest alternate solutions. Whether it’s a conference table from an expensive manufacturer or a “special,” finding these items and working with Locus to provide VE solutions often puts dealers in a better position.

Trade-Offs After the Bid Process

After being awarded a large job, there are opportunities to suggest alternate solutions. Similarly, for all these areas in which the dealer and end user are often over-paying, working with Locus can put dealers in a better position to increase margins.

Blending

Architects often formulate bid packages that major manufacturers cannot provide a solution for. The most common response is to overcharge or refuse to produce the item. By working with Locus, dealers can reply to the bid at a better price. Also, a bid may come out with a design that is specific to a proprietary line. By working with Locus, dealers who do not have access to the line can provide fast, effective solutions.

Our Clients

Our clients share in the belief that optimal environments foster meaningful connections and lead to better business outcomes.
